

The Brexit voted for in 2016 is vastly different to the Brexit on offer in 2019. The current deal offered by Boris Johnson threatens to erode worker's rights, remove environmental protections and reduce food standards. It would also see us leave the customs union. The Tory 'Get Brexit done' slogan is misleading, we would actually spend years negotiating a new trading relationship with the EU.

Therefore Labours policy is to negotiate a new deal in 3 months that would protect worker's rights and ensure we remain in the economic customs union. We would then put that deal to the people in 6 months, allowing people to vote on what Brexit actually looks like. We are the only party capable of gaining power who are pledging a peoples vote on Brexit. If the Liberal Democrats are offered a coalition with the Conservatives, can they be trusted to stick to their promise of a peoples vote?
